

our high schools. Although some courses are only offered at one school, the vast majority of the courses are offered at the three comprehensive high schools. Creating a common course catalog has helped us to develop a clean list of courses. Now we are developing a list of all courses that includes the core materials used for each course. We looked a copy of the list in draft form. Charisse will present a more complete list to IMC later this year. We will be developing similar lists for middle and elementary school levels.

The committee will be asked to grandfather the textbooks already in use. Question was asked if teachers will feel pressured to go with a published resource over a homegrown resource. Charisse said that the Middle School Social Studies Adoption Committee is grappling with that issue right now. As we move to 1:1 technology, we will consider home grown materials, Open Educational Resources and commercially developed materials.
